DDR commonly used in description line to indicate RAM

Quick Guide:

If you see a number followed by TB (1TB, 12TB etc.), then it is mostly likely a hard drive. You should then verify that it isn't a computer if other indicators don't lead directly to hard drive. Occasionally the expense description can start with the hard drive size but be a computer.

If you see a number followed by GB (2GB, 8GB, 100GB, 500GB etc.):

- <20GB investigate if this is RAM or Thumb Drive.
 - Does it say DDR? Then it is RAM.
 - Is it 2, 4, or 8GB? It's probably RAM.
 - Does it say USB? It's probably a storage device.
- 20GB to 250GB - It's probably a hard drive. Verify expense.
- >250GB - Verify that this isn't a computer. Occasionally the expense description can start with the hard drive size but be a computer.
